Just those last statements about the indictments and my family history. The concern, apparently, is that despite what my intention was in explaining my family history and despite the extent to which I was trying to make about corruption by the state and commerce, it could be effectively used to convince a journey that I am indeed a "criminal," or some such. Part of the problem is that my mother has been dragged into this by the FBI, and my lawyer and her are both very concerned about things I say that could in any way contribute to further problems.

Would you mind re-editing, taking down the last six minutes or so during which I talk about indictments, etc? Or, I could give you another interview to replace the whole thing with if you think cutting off the last part might make it all abrupt. Let me know.
